

INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

STUDENT HANDBOOK

2010 - 2011

LEBANON VALLEY COLLEGE

International Studies at LVC:

International Studies is an interdisciplinary program designed to give students a core of knowledge and basic understanding of an increasingly interdependent world. Students will explore international issues and affairs from political, sociological, cultural, historical, and economic perspectives and examine the complex interactions between the domestic and international affairs of nations with the goal of developing the skills necessary for a career in public service, the private sector, and academia. If students are interested in studying abroad, developing advanced skills in foreign language, engaging in undergraduate research or pursuing an internship, and taking courses across the curriculum, then international studies may be an attractive major or minor.

The International Studies major and minor will emphasize core and advanced elective courses in political science, art and art history, philosophy, religion, foreign language, history, economics, history, and sociology, anthropology, and require students to demonstrate competence in foreign language and participate in study abroad. It will also require students to take an introductory course, advanced level foreign language, engage in undergraduate or an internship, and take a senior seminar course. Students can select two tracks within the program: International Affairs or Comparative Culture.

Faculty

Chris J. Dolan, Assistant Professor of Political Science. B.A., Political Science, Siena College, 1995; M.A., Political Science, Northeastern University, 1997; Ph.D., International Studies and Government, University of South Carolina, 2002.

Dr. Dolan teaches courses in International Relations, and American Politics. His academic areas of focus and interest include international security and cooperation, economic globalization, international relations theory, national security studies, and U.S. foreign policy. He is the author of In War We Trust, co-editor of Striking First, and co-author of The Presidency and Economic Policy and has published articles in PS Political Science & Politics, Foreign Policy Analysis, International Studies Perspectives, Politics and Policy, Politics and Ethics Review, Policy Studies Journal, International Politics, Congress and the Presidency, Review of Policy Research, White House Studies and a number of book chapters.

Rick Chamberlin, Assistant Professor of German and French, B.A., Hillsdale College, 1988; A.M., University of Michigan, 1990; Ph.D., 1997.

Chamberlin teaches courses at all levels in both French and German. His areas of research are German and French medieval literature, as well as the relations between German writers and the wider culture in the 20th-century. He also directs our summer study program in Würzburg, Germany.

Highlights of the International Studies Program:

1. Collaborative Research/Internship Tracks: The LVC IS program is designed to provide students with the choice of developing their research skills or participating in an internship program.

Research Track: One existing possibility for students at LVC is building their research skills and collaborating with a professor on a research project. Students can receive course credits and hone their skills at collecting, analyzing and interpreting information by obtaining 3 academic credits of research methodology and at least 3 credits of undergraduate research.

Internship Track: If students wish to develop experience, they can choose to participate in at least 6 credits in a LVC approved internship program. IS majors can complete an international/foreign policy-related internship in the nation's capital while earning academic credits through the Washington Center or Philadelphia Center programs or any other LVC-approved internship program, which provide opportunities for professional exploration, intellectual development, and personal growth.

2. Study Abroad: The International Studies program is designed to be a very flexible major and minor to accommodate and address several constraints faced by many of our students.
 - a. Flexibility: For example, many IS programs at other colleges have very strict study abroad components that require majors and minors to attend at least one semester of study abroad in an approved program. Some programs require students to study abroad for at least one full year. The LVC IS program requires students to study abroad, however, it allows for sufficient elasticity so majors and minors can attend any of the approved off-campus international programs that are offered by the LVC Study Abroad office; for example: any of the various semester long programs, exchange programs, mini-terms, short-term, or summer programs.
 - b. Academic Credit: Moreover, courses taken in any LVC Study Abroad program can count toward the major or minor in IS; however, such courses must have approved equivalent courses in the LVC catalogue. It is highly recommended that students obtain approval from International Studies program advisers prior to attending study abroad programs. This considerable amount of flexibility can hopefully be an attractive feature for students who are considering the major or minor and one that distinguishes the program from other institutions.
3. Complement other LVC programs: The considerable flexibility also allows students to use elective hours in the LVC IS program to complement another minor or major or foreign language.
4. 2 Concentrations: The two concentrations in the present plan were created in order to provide sufficient choice for students between a more conventional track (International Affairs) and a more socio-cultural track (comparative culture).
 - a. International Affairs: The IA track is a very traditional concentration in IS based on a core emphasis on institutions, politics, history, and economics.
 - b. Comparative Culture: The CC track is somewhat more unique and could serve as an attractive feature for students because of its humanities core of Art and Art History, English, philosophy, religion, and sociology.

Now, more than ever, it is important to understand the world in which we live: one's position in the world, and how different cultural, economic, political and social systems operate and interrelate. Courses in International Studies will provide students with a frame of reference to better understand the world in which we live; one's position in the world; and how different cultural, economic, political, and social systems operate and interrelate.

A general goal of the program is to equip students so that they may adjust to the new international environment in which they will increasingly find themselves living. This is done through an interdisciplinary approach drawing on courses from varying academic disciplines and different world regions. Another general goal of this new program is to train students to be globally aware and think critically as well as to be conversant in global affairs, sensitive to the needs and desires of diverse systems and cultures, skilled in a foreign language, and to have the necessary background and tools to analyze global problems in a comprehensive manner.

Minor in International Studies (21 Credits)

Concentration 1 – International Affairs:

LVC IS, as a distinct academic program, will not exist in a vacuum but in a larger institutional framework to promote and sustain a learning community centered on exposing majors and minors to global issues and events. Part of the challenge in building the LVC IS program is to make sure we take advantage of the fact that international studies has a long and significant tradition of being broad and diverse (McCaughey 1981). IS at LVC will consist of courses that are geared toward reflecting general interests, cross-national comparisons and multi-disciplinary interests, foreign languages and world cultures, and theoretical interests.

- Study Abroad: Students are required to participate in at least one approved off-campus program offered by the LVC Study Abroad office. This may include a semester of study abroad or an approved alternative program, such as exchange programs, mini-terms, short-term or summer programs. Courses taken in off-campus programs can be accepted for credit to the International Studies minor, but approval for such credit is contingent on equivalent courses in the LVC catalogue. Career Opportunities

There are career opportunities for graduates with International Studies degrees in a wide range of fields, including but not limited to U.S. government, international organizations, non-governmental organizations, research institutes, non-profit organizations, and private business. IS majors will also have opportunities to attend a wide range of master's and doctoral graduate programs.

Traditional career choices for International Studies majors were jobs in international organizations, such as the United Nations, and U.S. government jobs, including the US Foreign Service, and positions in the international divisions of many other departments, including Treasury, Commerce, and Agriculture. Non-governmental organizations, such as the International Red Cross, Amnesty International, and Greenpeace were other options, as were research positions in interest groups dealing with international issues and think-tanks in major cities.

And, international businesses have been recruiters, although many employees had to spend a period of time at corporate headquarters in training and entry-level jobs before being posted overseas. Many employers are interested in applicants with international experience.

Graduates with international study/work experience are at a greater advantage when applying to international-oriented positions within and outside the United States. Employers want to know that their employees are well-rounded and will be prepared for dealing with global issues. Many employers are interested in applicants with international experience. Graduates with international study/work experience are at a greater advantage when applying to international-oriented positions within and outside the U.S.

In international work, students will need several areas of expertise. It is therefore recommended that students work on developing the following skills:

- a. The language and culture of the foreign country with whom or where a student may want to work.
- b. Join – or start – a conversation group in a language where students meet together weekly to speak the language to improve fluency.
- c. Strongly consider studying abroad for an extended period of time. Employers want someone who can not only speak the language but has lived in the culture for a period of 1-2 years. They want to hire someone who is knowledgeable about other cultures.
- d. Perform an internship or volunteer services for a non-governmental organization.
- e. Do an independent project involving translation (oral or written), research, and/or writing.

According to the American Association of Colleges and Universities (AACU) and the National Leadership Council for Liberal Education and America's Promise (LEAP), the “percentage of employers who want colleges to ‘place more emphasis’ on essential learning outcomes” are as follows (Hart Research/AACU 2007; www.aacu/leap):

1. Knowledge of Human Cultures and the Physical and Natural World:
 - Science and Technology: 82%
 - Global Issues: 72%
 - The Role of the United States in the World: 60%
 - Cultural Values and Traditions (U.S./Global): 53%
2. Personal and Social Responsibility:
 - Intercultural Competence (teamwork in diverse groups): 76%
 - Intercultural Knowledge (global issues): 72%
 - Ethics and Values: 56%
 - Cultural Values/Traditions-U.S./global: 53%

The following lists provide a brief sampling of the kind of jobs and work environments appropriate for a student majoring in International Studies. These titles and work settings are by no means an exhaustive list. Because the world of work is always changing, over time job titles and work settings can change. This listing is provided in hopes of providing initial insight into a particular career field that would employ the skills and knowledge gained through this major:
